cross: cf. crusade.] An old Portuguese coin of gold or silver, bearing the figure of a cross.

cruse (krōs or kröz), n. [ME. cruse, cruce: cf. Icel. krūs, pot, tankard, D. kroes, cup, pot.] An earthen pot or bottle, or any small vessel for liquids (see 1 Kings, xvii. 12-16); also, a drinking-vessel. [Archaic.] crush (krush), v. t. [Appar. < OF. croissir, crash, gnash, break, crush, prob. from Teut.] To press and bruise, as between two hard bodies; squeeze or batter out of shape or normal condition; crumple, as by rough handling; also, to press or squeeze forcibly or violently; also, to put down, overpower, or subdue completely; overwhelm; also, to oppress grievously; also, to break into small fragments or particles, as ore, stone, etc.; also, to force (out) by pressing or squeezing; also, to drink (wine, etc.).—crushed strawberry, a deep, dull purplish-pink color.—crush, v. i. To become crushed; also, to advance with crushing; press or crowd forcibly.—crush, n. The act of crushing, or the state of being crushed; esp., the crowding together of persons or things, or the mass crowded together; a great crowd; a crowded social gathering (colloq.).—crush'er, n. One who or that which crushes; a machine for crushing ore, stone, etc.—crush=hat', n. A hat which can be crushed or folded without injury; a soft felt hat; an operahat.—crush'ing, p. a. That crushes; bruising; overwhelming.—crush'ing-ly, adv.

crust (krust), n. [OF. crouste (F. croûte), < L. crusta, hard surface, rind, shell, crust.] The hard outer portion of a loaf, as of bread (distinguished from crumb); a piece of this; the outside covering of a pie; also, any more or less hard external covering or coating; a scab or eschar; the exterior portion of the earth, accessible to examination; the hard outer shell or covering of an animal or plant.—crust, v. I. tr. To cover with or as with a crust; incrust; fat, fäte, fär, fall, äsk, färe; net, mē, hēr; pin, pine; not, nōte, möve, nōr; up, lüte, püll; oi, oil; ou, out; (lightened) aviäry, clect, argōny, intö, qnite; (obscured) errant, operä, ardent, actör, natüre; ch, chip; g, go; th, thin; τη, then; y, you;

for producing low temperatures; a freezing-mixture.—cry-o-gen'ic, a. Of or pertaining to cryogens or the production of low temperatures.—cry-o-hy'drate (-hī'drāt), n. In chem., a definite mixture of ice and a crystallized salt, obtained by freezing a saturated aqueous solution of the salt.—cry'o-lite (-lit), n. [+ -lite.] A native fluoride of sodium and aluminium, used as a source of aluminium and in making glass, etc.—cry-om'e-ter (-om'e-tēr), n. [+ -meter.] A thermometer for the measurement of low temperatures, as one containing alcohol instead of mercury.—cry-oph'o-rus (-of'ō-rus), n. [NL. (Gr. -phōros, bearing: see -phorous.)] An instrument for showing the fall of temperature or the freezing of water by evaporation.—cry'o-scope (-skōp), n. [+ -scope.] An instrument for determining the freezing-points of liquids or solutions, as in testing milk to learn whether, or to what extent, it has been watered.—cry-os/co-py (-os'kō-pi), n. [+ -scopy.] The determination of the freezing-points of liquids or solutions, or of the lowering of the freezing-points of liquids by dissolved substances; in med., the determination of the freezing-points of certain bodily fluids, as urine, for diagnosis.—cry-o-scop'ic (-skop'ik), a.

crypto- Form of Gr. κρυπτός, hidden, secret, used in combination.—crypt-to-clas-tic (krip-tō-klas'tik), a. [See clastic.] In petrog., composed of fragments too small to be seen by the unaided eye.—crypt-to-crys'tal-line (-kris'tā-lin), a. Indistinctly crystalline; noting or pertaining to rocks whose crystals are so small as to be indistinguishable, even with the microscope.

crypt-to-gam (krip'tō-gam), n. [F. cryptogame = NL. cryptogamus, cryptogamous, < Gr. κρυπτός, hidden, + γάμος, marriage.] In bot., any of the Cryptogamia, an old primary division of plants comprising those without stamens and pistils, and therefore without flowers and seeds, as the ferns, mosses, and thallophytes; a plant without a true seed: opposed to phanerogam.—crypt-to-gam'ic, a. Of or pertaining to the cryptogams.—crypt-tog'a-mous (-tog'-a-mus), a. Having the characters of the cryptogams.

crypt-to-gen-ic (krip-tō-jen'ik), a. [See crypto- and -genic.] Of obscure or unknown origin, as a disease. Also crypt-tog'e-nous (-toj'e-nus).

crypt-to-gram (krip'tō-gram), n. [See crypto- and -gram.] A piece of writing in secret characters; something written in cipher.—crypt'to-gram-mat'ic (-grā-mat'ik), a.

crypt-to-graph (krip'tō-gráf), n. [See crypto- and -graph.] A cryptogram (as, "We see it [a character] doubled no less than five times, although the cryptograph is brief": Poe's "Gold-Bug"); also, a system of secret writing; a cipher; also, the form or method of writing employing secret characters.—crypt-tog-ra-phy (-tog'ra-fi), n. [See -graphy.] The process or art of writing in secret characters, or in cipher; also, anything so written.—crypt-to-graph'ic (-graf'ik), a.—crypt-tog'ra-phist, n.

crypt-tol-o-gy (krip-tol'ō-jī), n. [See crypto- and -logy.] Occult or enigmatical language.

crypt-to-nym (krip'tō-nim), n. [See crypto- and -onym.] A secret name.—crypt-ton'y-mous (-ton'i-mus), a. Having the name concealed; anonymous.

crys-tal (kris'tal). [OF. F. cristal, < L. crystallum, < Gr. κρύσταλλος, ice, crystal, < κρύος, icy cold, frost.] I. n. A clear, transparent mineral resembling ice, esp. the transparent or nearly transparent form of pure quartz; anything made of or resembling such a substance; also, glass of a high degree of brilliance; sometimes, cut glass; also, the glass cover over the face of a watch; in chem. and mineral., a body having a specific internal structure and inclosed by symmetrically arranged plane surfaces, formed by the solidification of a substance, and consisting of a single element or a compound; in wireless teleg. and teleph., the piece of galena, carborundum, or the like forming the essential part of a crystal detector, or the detector itself. II. a. Composed of crystal; also, resembling crystal; clear; transparent; also, in wireless teleg. and teleph., pertaining to or employing a crystal detector.—crystal detector, in wireless teleg. and teleph., a device for rectifying the alternating currents in a radio receiving apparatus, consisting essentially of a crystal, as of galena or carborundum, which permits a current to pass freely in one direction only: commonly constructed by embedding the lower part of the crystal in a mass of soft metal; which serves as one electrical contact, and allowing the free surface of the crystal to be touched by a fine, adjustable wire (called a cat-whisker), which serves as the other electrical contact.—crys'tal, v. t.; -talled or -talled, -taling or -talling. To make into crystal; crystallize.—crys'tal-gaz'ing (-gā'zing), n. A steady staring at a crystal or glass ball or other clear object in order to arouse visual perceptions, as of distant happenings, the future, etc.—crys'tal-gaz'er, n.

crys-tal-lif'er-ous, crys-tal-lig'er-ous (kris-tā-lif'e-rus, -lij'e-rus), a. [L. crystallum, crystal: see -ferous and -gerous.] Bearing, containing, or yielding crystals.

crys-tal-line (kris'tā-lin or -lin), a. [OF. F. cristallin, < L. crystallinus, < Gr. κρυστάλλινος.] Of or like crystal; clear; transparent; also, formed by crystallization; also, composed of crystals, as rocks; also, pertaining to crystals or their formation.—crystalline heaven or sphere, in the Ptolemaic system of astronomy, a sphere, or one of two spheres, supposed to exist between the primum mobile outside and the firmament of the fixed stars inside, and to communicate motion to all within.—crystalline lens, in anat., a doubly convex, transparent, lens-like body in the eye, situated behind the iris and serving to focus the rays of light on the retina.—crys-tal-lin'i-ty (-lin'i-ti), n.

crys-tal-li-tis (kris-tā-lī'tis), n. [NL.] In pathol., inflammation of the crystalline lens of the eye.

crys-tal-liz-a-ble (kris'tā-lī-zā-bl), a. Capable of being crystallized.

crys-tal-li-z-a-tion (kris'tā-lī-zā'shōn), n. The act of crystallizing; the process of forming crystals; also, a crystallized body or formation.

crys-tal-lize (kris'tā-līz), v.; -lized, -lizing. [= F. crystalliser.] I. tr. To form into crystals; cause to assume crystalline form; fig., to give definite or concrete form to.

II. intr. To form crystals; become crystalline in form; fig., to assume definite or concrete form.—crys'tal-lized, p. a. Formed into crystals; crystalline; also, candied, as ginger.—crys'tal-liz-er, n.

crys-tal-lo- Form of Gr. κρύσταλλος, crystal, used in combination.—crys-tal-lo-gen-e-sis (kris'tā-lō-jen'e-sis), n. The genesis or formation of crystals, esp. as a subject of scientific study. Also crys-tal-log'e-ny (-lōj'e-ni).—crys'tal-lo-gen'ic, a.—crys-tal-log'ra-phy (-lōg'ra-fi), n. [See -graphy.] The science dealing with crystallization and the forms and structure of crystals.—crys-tal-log'ra-pher, n.—crys'tal-lo-graph'ic (-graf'ik), a.

crys-tal-loid (kris'tā-lōid). [Gr. κρυστάλλοειδής: see crystral and -oid.] I. a. Resembling a crystal; of the nature of a crystalloid. II. n. A substance (usually crystallizable) which when dissolved in a liquid will diffuse readily through vegetable or animal membranes (cf. colloid); in bot., one of certain minute crystal-like granules of protein, found in the tissues of various seeds.—crys-tal-loi'dal, a.

(variable) d as d or j, s as s or sh, t as t or ch, z as z or zh; o, F. cloche; ü, F. menu; ch, Sc. loch; ñ, F. bonbon; ˙, primary accent; ˘, secondary accent; †, obsolete; <, from; +, and; =, equals. See also lists at beginning of book.

crys-tal-lo-man-cy (kris'ta-lō-man'si), n. [See crystallo- and -mancy.] Divination by means of a crystal ball or other transparent body. Cf. crystal-gazing.

crys-tal-vi-sion (kris'tal-vizh'qn), n. Visual perception, as of distant happenings, the future, etc., supposed to be aroused by crystal-gazing; also, the image or images which seem to be perceived.

csar-das (chär'däsh), n. [Hung.] A Hungarian national dance in two movements, one slow and the other fast.

cten-o-dac-tyl (ten-ō-dak'til), n. [NL. Ctenodactylus, < Gr. κτεν-, comb, + δάκτυλος, finger or toe.] A hystricomorphic rodent, Ctenodactylus massoni (or gundi), of northern Africa, with small ears, a stumpy tail, and hind limbs having a fringe of bristles on the inner toes; the comb-rat or gundi.

cten-oid (ten'oid or tē'noid), a. [Gr. κτενοειδής, < κτεν-, comb, + εἶδος, form.]

I. a. Comb-like or pectinate, as the scales or the dentition of certain fishes; having such scales, as a fish. II. n. A fish with ctenoid scales.—cte-noi-de-an (te-noi'dē-an), a. and n.

cte-noph-o-ran (te-nof'ō-ran). [NL. Ctenophora, pl., < Gr. κτεν-, comb, + -φόρος, bearing: see -phorous.]

I. a. Belonging or pertaining to the Ctenophora, a small group of coelenterates, now regarded as a class, comprising certain free-swimming jellyfishes which move chiefly by means of eight meridional rows of transverse comb-like plates. II. n. A ctenophoran animal.—cte-n-o-phore (ten'ō-fōr or tē'nō-), n. One of the rows of comb-like plates which form the chief locomotive organs of the Ctenophora; also, a ctenophoran animal.

cuar-ta (kwär'tā), n. [Amer. Sp.] A long rawhide whip. [Southwestern U. S.]

cub¹ (kub), n. [Origin obscure.] The young of certain animals, as the fox, bear, etc.; hence, an awkward or uncouth youth (humorous or contemptuous); also, an inexperienced newspaper reporter (journalistic slang).—cub¹, v. t. or i.; cubbed, cubbing. To bring forth (a cub or cubs). cub² (kub), n. [Prob. from LG.] A stall or pen for cattle; a coop; a crib for fodder; a bin or chest. [Chiefly prov. Eng.]

cu-bage (kū'bāj), n. The determination of the cubic contents of a thing; also, the cubic contents determined.

Cu-ban (kū'ban). I. a. Of or pertaining to Cuba, in the West Indies. II. n. A native or inhabitant of Cuba.

cu-ba-ture (kū'ba-tūr), n. The determination of the cubic contents of a thing; also, cubic contents.

cub-by (kub'i), n.; pl. cubbies (-iz). [Cf. *cub*².] A snug, confined place; a cubby-hole: as, "Up garret was a little cubby, with a pallet in it" (Mark Twain's "Huckleberry Finn", xxvi).—cub/by-hole, n. A small inclosed space; a small apartment; a closet; a very small house.—cub/by-house, n. A little house, as one built by children in play.

cube (küb), n. [F. cube, < L. cubus, < Gr. κύβος, die, cube.] A solid bounded by six equal squares, the angle between any two adjacent faces being a right angle; a piece of anything of this form; in arith. and alg., the third power of a quantity (as, the cube of 4 is $4 \times 4 \times 4$, or 64).—cube root, the quantity of which a given quantity is the cube: as, 4 is the cube root of 64.—cube, v. t.; cubed, cubing. To measure the cubic contents of; also, to raise to the third power; find the cube of.

cu-beb (kū'beb), n. [F. cubèbe, < Ar. kabābah.] The spicy fruit or berry of an East Indian piperaceous climbing shrub, Piper cubeba: dried in an unripe but fully grown state, and much used in medicine in the treatment of urinary and bronchial disorders.

[L. cubicus, < Gr. κυβικός.] Having the form of a cube; also, of three dimensions, solid, or pertaining to solid content (as, a cubic foot, the volume of a cube whose edges are each a foot long; cubic measure, see below); in arith., alg., etc., being of the third power or degree; in crystal, belonging or pertaining to the isometric system of crystallization.—cubic measure, the measurement of volume in cubic units; a system of such units, esp. the one in which 1,728 cubic inches = 1 cubic foot, 27 cubic feet = 1 cubic yard.—cu'bi-cal, a. Cubic.—cu'bi-cal-ly, adv.—cu'bi-cal-ness, n.

cu-bi-cle (kū'bi-kl), n. [L. cubiculum, < cubare, lie.] A bedchamber, esp. a small one. Also cu'bi-cule (-kül).

cu-bic-u-lum (kū-bik'ū-lum), n.; pl. -la (-lā). [L.: see cubicle.] A bedchamber; in archæol., a burial-chamber, as in catacombs.

cu-bi-form (kū'bi-fōrm), a. Having the form of a cube.

cu-bism (kū'bizm), n. A recent movement in pictorial art characteristically involving representation by cube-like and other geometrical figures.—cu'bist, n.

cu-bit (kū'bit), n. [L. cubitum, also cubitus, elbow, cubit.] The forearm; also, the ulna; also, an ancient linear unit based on the length of the forearm, varying in extent, but usually from 17 to 21 inches.—cu'bi-tal, a. [L. cubitalis.] Of or pertaining to the forearm or the ulna; also, of the length of a cubit.—cu'bi-tus (-tus), n. [L.] In anat., the forearm; also, the ulna.

cu-boid (kū'boid). [Gr. κυβοειδής: see -oid.] I. a. Resembling a cube in form; in anat., noting or pertaining to the outermost bone of the distal row of tarsal bones. II. n. Something resembling a cube in form; in anat., the cuboid bone; in math., a rectangular parallelepiped.—cu-boi-dal (kū-boi'dal), a.

cuck-ing=stool (kuk'ing-stöl), n. [Cf. obs. cuck, void excrement.] A former instrument of punishment consisting of a chair, sometimes in the form of a close-stool, in which an offender, esp. a common scold, was strapped, to be jeered at and pelted by the crowd, or, sometimes, to be ducked. Cf. ducking-stool.

cuck-old (kuk'old), n. [OF. cucuault, < cucu, cuckoo; in allusion to the female cuckoo's laying her eggs in the nests of other birds.] The husband of an unfaithful wife.—cuck'old, v. t. To make a cuckold of (a husband).—cuck'-old-ly, a.—cuck'old-ry, n.

cuck-oo (kük'ō), n.; pl. -oos (-ōz). [OF. cucu (F. coucou), cuckoo; imit. of the bird's call: cf. D. koekoek, LG. kukuk, G. kuckuk, L. cuculus, Gr. κόκκυξ, cuckoo.] Any bird of the genus Cuculus (family Cuculidæ), esp. C. canorus, a common European migratory bird noted for its characteristic call, and for the female's habit of laying her eggs in the nests of other birds, for the young to be reared by foster-parents; any bird of the family Cuculidæ, as a member of the American genus Coccyzus or the chaparral-cock, Geococcyx californianus; also, the call of the cuckoo, or an imitation of it; also, a fool or simpleton.—cuck'oo, v. I. intr. To utter the call of the cuckoo, or an imitation of it. II. tr. To repeat monotonously.—cuck'oo=*clock, n. A clock which announces the hours by a sound like the call of the cuckoo.—cuck'oo=*flow'er, n. Any of various plants, as the lady's-smock, Cardamine pratensis, or the ragged-robin, Lychnis flos-cuculi.—cuck'oo=*pint (-pint), n. [Earlier cuckoo-pintle.] A common European species of arum, Arum maculatum. Also called wake-robin.—cuck'oo=*spit, n. A frothy secretion found on plants, exuded as a protective covering by the young of certain insects as the froghoppers; also, an insect secreting this. Also cuck'oo=*spit'tle.

Cuckoo (Cuculus canorus).

cu-cul-late (kū'ku-lāt or kū-kul'āt), a. [LL. cucullatus, hooded, < L. cucullus, hood.] Cowled; hooded; also, resembling a cowl or hood. Also cu'cul-lat-ed.—cu'cul-late-ly, adv.

Cuckoo-pint, or Wake-robin.

a, spadix; b, b, stamens, or male flowers; c, c, ovaries, or female flowers; d, spathe; e, corn.

cu-cul-li-form (kū-kul'i-fōrm), a. [L. cucullus, hood: see -form.] Hood-shaped. cu-cum-ber (kū'kum-bēr), n. [OF. coucumbre (F. concomb), < L. cucumis (cucumber).] A cucurbitaceous creeping plant, Cucumis sativus, occurring in many cultivated forms, yielding a long fleshy fruit which is commonly eaten green as a salad and when young used for pickling; the fruit of this plant; also, any of various allied or similar plants, or its fruit.—cu'cum-ber=*tree, n. Any of several American magnolias, esp. Magnolia acuminata; also, any of certain other trees, as the bilimbi.

cu-cu-mi-form (kū-kū'mi-fōrm), a. [L. cucumis, cucumber: see -form.] Shaped like a cucumber; approximately cylindrical, with rounded or tapering ends.

cu-cur-bit (kū-kēr'bit), n. [L. cucurbita, gourd.] A gourd; any cucurbitaceous plant; also, a roundish vessel formerly used as the lower part of a distilling apparatus.—cu-cur-bi-ta'ceous (-bi-tā'shius), a. Belonging to the Cucurbitaceæ, or gourd family of plants, which includes the pumpkin, squash, cucumber, muskmelon, watermelon, colocynth, etc. cud (kud), n. [AS. cudu, cwidu: cf. *quid*¹.] The portion of food which a ruminating animal returns from the first stomach to the mouth to chew a second time.

cud-bear (kud'bār), n. [From Dr. Cuthbert Gordon (18th century), who patented it.] A violet coloring matter obtained from various lichens, esp. Lecanora tartarea; also, a lichen yielding this.

cud-dle (kud'li), v.; -dled, -dling. [Origin uncertain.] I. tr. To draw or hold close in an affectionate manner; hug tenderly; fondle. II. intr. To lie close and snug; nestle; curl up in going to sleep.—cud'dle, n. An act of cuddling; a hug or embrace.

Cudbear-plant (Lecanora tartarea).

cud-dy¹ (kud'i), n.; pl. cuddies (-iz). [Origin uncertain.] A donkey; fig., a stupid fellow. [Chiefly Sc.]

cud-dy² (kud'i), n.; pl. cuddies (-iz). [Origin uncertain.] A small cabin on a ship or boat, esp. one under the poop; also, a small room; a cupboard.

cudg-el (kuj'el), n. [AS. cycgel.] A short, thick stick used as a weapon; a club.—cudg'el, v. t.; -eled or -elled, -eling or -elling. To strike with a cudgel; beat (sometimes fig.: as, "Cudgel thy brains no more about it, for your dull ass will not mend his pace with beating," Shakspeare's "Hamlet," v. 1. 63).—cudg'el-er, cudg'el-ler, n.

cud-weed (kud'wēd), n. Any of the woolly herbs constituting the asteraceous genus Gnaphalium; also, any of various plants of allied genera.

cue¹ (kū), n. [Formerly q, qu, as if an abbreviation, possibly for L. qualis, of what kind, or quando, when.] The concluding word or words of an actor's speech, serving as the signal for an answering speech, the entrance of another actor, etc; fig., any indication or direction when or how to speak or act; a guiding hint or suggestion; also, the part one is to play at a particular juncture; the course of action one ought to pursue; also, humor or disposition.

cue² (kū), n. [F. queue: see queue.] A queue of hair; a queue or file, as of persons awaiting their turn; a long, straight tapering rod tipped with a soft pad, used to strike the ball in billiards, pool, etc.—cue'=ball, n. In billiards, etc., the ball struck by the cue as distinguished from the other balls on the table.—cue'ist, n. One who uses a cue, as in billiards; esp., an expert in the use of the cue.

cuff¹ (kuf), v. t. [Origin uncertain.] To strike with the fist or the open hand; beat; buffet: as, "Tom cuffed Sid's ears" (Mark Twain's "Tom Sawyer," xxxiv.).—cuff¹, n. A blow with the fist or the open hand; a buffet.

cuff² (kuf), n. [ME. cuffe, coffe, glove, mitten; origin uncertain.] A glove or mitten; a fold, band, or variously shaped piece serving as a trimming or finish for a sleeve at the wrist; a turned-up fold at the bottom of trouser-legs, etc.; a separate or detachable band or piece of linen or other material worn about the wrist, inside or outside of the sleeve; the part of a gauntlet or long glove that extends over the wrist; a handcuff.

Cu-ḡic, Ku-ḡic (kū'fik). I. a. Of or pertaining to Cufa, or Kufa, an old city south of Babylon: applied esp. to a form of Arabic characters employed by the copyists of Cufa in transcribing the Koran. II. n. The Cufic characters collectively.

cui bo-no? (ki bō'nō). [L., 'to whom (is it) for a benefit?'] For whose benefit? also, loosely, for what use? of what good?—a phrase sometimes used adjectively (as, cui bono considerations) and as a noun (as, "Will you allow me . . . to inquire into the cui bono of all the pains and expense you have incurred?" blow, as with a knife, whip, etc.; an act, speech, etc., which wounds the feelings; an excision or omission of a part; a part excised or omitted; a piece cut off, esp. of meat; the quantity, as of lumber, cut; a reduction in price; also, a passage or course straight across (as, a short cut); also, the manner or fashion in which anything is cut; fig., style; manner; kind; also, the result of cutting, as an incision, wound, etc.; a passage, channel, etc., made by cutting or digging; an engraved block or plate for printing from or an impression from it (cf. woodcut); also, a refusal to recognize an acquaintance (colloq.); an absence when attendance is required (colloq.); also, a cutting of the cards in card-playing; also, one of several pieces of straw, paper, etc., used in drawing lots (as, to draw cuts for a thing).—cut'=and=thrust', a. Designed for both cutting and thrusting, as a sword.

cu-ta-ne-ous (kū-tā'nē-us), a. [L. cutis, skin.] Of, pertaining to, or affecting the cutis or skin.—cu-ta-ne-ous-ly, adv.

cut-a-way (kut'a-wā'), I. a. Of a coat, having the skirt cut away from the waist in front in a curve or slope. II. n. A cutaway coat.

cut-back (kut'bak), n. A going back in the course of presenting a story, esp. by moving pictures, in order to bring up some event or period of the past.

catch (kuch), n. [Malay kāchu.] Same as catechu.

catch-er-ry, catch-e-ry (ku-cher'i, kuch'e-ri), n. [Hind. kachahri.] In India, a public administrative or judicial office; also, any administrative office.

cute (kūt), a.; compar. cuter, superl. cutest. [For acute.] Acute mentally; clever; shrewd; also, quaintly pleasing or attractive; 'cunning.' [Colloq.]-cute'ly, adv.—cute'-ness, n.

cut-grass (kut'gräs), n. Any of various grasses with blades whose rough edges cut the flesh when drawn against it, esp. grasses of the genus Homalocenchrus, as H. oryzoides ('rice cut-grass').

cu-ti-cle (kū'ti-kl), n. [L. cuticula, dim. of cutis, skin.] The epidermis; also, any superficial integument, membrane, or the like; in bot., a very thin hyaline film covering the surface of plants, and derived from the outer surfaces of the epidermal cells.—cu-tic-u-lar (kū'tik'ū-lär), a.

cu-tin (kū'tin), n. [L. cutis, skin.] A transparent waxy substance constituting together with cellulose the cuticle of plants.

cu-tis (kū'tis), n. [L., skin.] The corium or true skin, beneath the epidermis.—cutis vera (vē'rā). [L., 'true skin.'] The cutis.

fat, fäte, fär, fäll, äsk, färe; net, mē, hēr; pin, pīne; not, nōte, möve, nór; up, lüte, püll; oi, oil; ou, out; (lightened) aviäry, elect, agōny, intö, ünite; (obscured) errant, operä, ardent, actör, natüre; ch, chip; g, go; th, thin; ð, then; y, you;

cut-lass (kut'las), n. [F. coutelas, < OF. coutel, < L. cutellus: see cutler.] A short, heavy, slightly curved sword, used esp. at sea.

cut-ler (kut'lér), n. [OF. F. coutelier, < ML. cuttellarus, < L. cutellus, dim. of cutler, knife.] One who makes, sells, or repairs knives and other cutting instruments.—cut'ler-y, n. [OF. coutellerie (F. coutellerie).] The art or business of a cutler; also, cutting instruments collectively.

cut-let (kut'let), n. [F. côtelette, dim. of côte, < L. costa, rib.] A slice of meat for broiling or frying, orig. one, as of mutton, containing a rib, but now commonly one cut from the leg, esp. of veal or mutton; also, a kind of croquette in a flattened form, made of minced chicken, lobster, or the like.

cut-off (kut'óf), n. A cutting off, or something that cuts off; a shorter passage or way, as one across a bend; specif., the arresting of the passage of steam or working fluid to the cylinder of an engine, or the mechanism effecting it.

cut-out (kut'out), n. A cutting out; also, something that cuts out; a device for breaking an electric circuit or for eliminating part of it; a device in the exhaust-pipe of an internal-combustion engine exhausting through a muffler, which when open permits the engine to exhaust directly into the air; also, something cut out from something else.

cut-purse (kut'pérs), n. One who stole by cutting purses (a practice common when men wore purses at their girdles); hence, a pickpocket.

cut-ter (kut'érr), n. One who or that which cuts; also, a medium-sized boat for rowing or sailing, or a launch, belonging to a ship of war; a one-masted boat or vessel with a comparatively narrow and deep hull, rigged more or less like a sloop; a light-armed government vessel or steamship ('revenue cutter'), used to prevent smuggling and enforce the customs regulations; also, a small, light, commonly single-seated sleigh, usually for one horse.

cut-tle (kut'l), n. [AS. cudele.] A cuttlefish.—cut'tle-bone, n. The calcareous internal shell or plate of true cuttlefishes, used to make powder for polishing, and fed to canaries to supply the necessary lime, etc.—cut'tle-fish, n.; pl. -fishes or (esp. collectively) -fish. Any of various decapod dibranchiate cephalopods, esp. of the genus Sepia, having sucker-bearing arms and the power of ejecting a black ink-like fluid when pursued; hence, any dibranchiate cephalopod, as the squid or the octopus.

cut-ty (kut'ti), [From cut.] I. a. Cut short; short; also, testy. [Chiefly Sc.] II. n.; pl. cutties (-iz). A short spoon; a short-stemmed tobacco-pipe; also, a term of reproach for a girl or a woman (as, "The great Babylonian madam is now, indeed, but a very little cutty": Galt's "Ayrshire Legatees," iv.). [Chiefly Sc.]—cut'ty=stool, n. A low stool; also, a seat in old churches in Scotland, where offenders against chastity, or other delinquents, had to sit and receive a public rebuke. [Sc.]

cut-wa-ter (kut'wá'tér), n. The fore part of a ship's stem or prow, which cuts the water; also, the sharp edge of a pier of a bridge, which resists the action of water or ice; also, the black skimmer (bird), Rhynchops nigra (see skimmer).

cut-work (kut'wérk), n. A kind of openwork embroidery in which the ground is cut out about the pattern; also, appliqué work.

cut-worm (kut'wérn), n. Any of various caterpillars of certain noctuid moths, which feed at night on the young plants of corn, cabbage, etc., cutting them off at or near the ground.

cy-an-am-ide (sī-an-am'id or -id), n. [From cyan(ogen) + amide.] In chem., a white crystalline compound prepared by the action of ammonia on cyanogen chloride.

cy-a-nate (sī'a-nāt), n. In chem., a salt of cyanic acid.

cy-an-ic (sī-an'ik), a. [Gr. κύανος, dark-blue; in part with reference to cyanogen.] Blue (applied esp. to a series of colors in flowers, including the blues and all colors which tend toward blue); also, pertaining to or containing cyanogen (as, cyanic acid, HOCN).

cy-a-nide (sī'a-nid or -nid), n. [From cyan(ogen) + -ide.] In chem., a combination of cyanogen with an element or a radical: as, potassium cyanide (a powerful poison).—cy'a-nide, v. t.; -nided, -niding. To treat with a cyanide, as an ore in the process of extracting gold.

cy-an-o-gen (sī-an'ō-jen), n. [F. cyanogène, < Gr. κύανος, dark-blue, + γεν-, bear, produce.] In chem., a univalent radical, CN, consisting of one atom of carbon and one of nitrogen, and occurring in various compounds, some of which are blue; also, a poisonous, inflammable gas, C₂N₂.

cy-a-nom-e-ter (sī-a-nom'e-tér), n. [See cyano- and -meter.] An instrument for measuring degrees of blueness, as of the sky.—cy-a-nom'e-try, n.

cy-a-nop-a-thy (sī-a-nop'a-thi), n. [See cyano- and -pathy.] Same as cyanosis.

cy-a-no-sis (sī-a-nō'sis), n. [NL., < Gr. κύανωσις, dark-blue color, < κύανος: see cyano-.] In pathol., blueness or lividness of the skin, as from imperfectly oxygenated blood.—cy-a-not'ic (-not'ik), a.

cy-an-o-type (sī-an'ō-tip), n. [See cyano- and -type.] A process of photographic printing in which a cyanide is employed, yielding prints which are usually blue in color; also, a print made by such a process.

cy-a-nu-ric (sī-a-nū'rik), a. [See cyano- and uric.] In chem., noting or pertaining to a white crystalline acid, C₃N₃O₃H₃, obtained by heating urea and in other ways.

cy-cad (sī'kad), n. [NL. Cycas (Cycad-), the typical genus, < Gr. κύκας, erron. for κόκας, acc. pl. of κόκη, kind of palm.] Any of the Cycadaceæ, a family, order, or group of gymnospermous plants intermediate in appearance between the tree-ferns and the palms, the species commonly having a thick, unbranched columnar trunk which bears a crown of large pinnate leaves. — cyc-a-da-ceous (sik-ä-dä'shius), a. Belonging to the Cycadaceæ, or cycad family or group of plants.

Cyanite, showing blade-like structure.

Cuttlefish of the Decapod Type (Sepia officinalis).

cyc-la-men (sik'lä-men), n. [NL., < Gr. κυκλάμινος.] Any plant of the primulaceous genus Cyclamen, comprising low-growing herbs with tuberous rootstocks and nodding white, purple, pink, or crimson flowers with reflexed petals.

cy-cle (sī'kl), n. [LL. cyclus, < Gr. κύκλος, ring, circle, wheel, round, revolution, cycle: see wheel.] An orbit in the heavens; also, a round of years or a recurring period of time, esp. one in which certain events or phenomena repeat themselves in the same order and at the same intervals; hence, any long period of years; an age; also, any round of operations or events; a series which returns upon itself; any complete course or series; specif., one of the complete series of changes in the working fluid in the cylinder of an internal-combustion engine; also, a complete or double alternation or reversal of an alternating electric current; also, a series of poetic or prose narratives gathering round some mythical or heroic theme (as, the Arthurian cycle; the Charlemagne cycle); also, a bicycle, tricycle, or the like. — cy'cle, v. i.; —cl-ed, —cl-ing. To move or revolve in cycles; pass through cycles; also, to ride a bicycle, tricycle, or the like; travel by cycle. — cy'cle-car, n. A light automobile built somewhat on the order of a motor-cycle but having four wheels. — cy'cler, n.

cyc-lic (sik'lik), a. [F. cyclique, < L. cyclicus, < Gr. κυκλικός.] Of or pertaining to a cycle or cycles; revolving or recurring in cycles; characterized by recurrence in cycles; in bot., arranged in whorls, as the parts of a flower; of a flower, having the parts so arranged; in chem., noting or pertaining to a compound whose structural formula contains a closed chain or ring of atoms. Also cyc'li-cal. — cyc'li-cal-ly, adv.

cy-clist (sī'klist), n. One who reckons by cycles; one who recognizes the cyclic recurrence of certain phenomena; also, one who rides a bicycle, tricycle, etc.

cyclo-. Form of Gr. κύκλος, ring, circle, wheel, used in combination.

cycloid (sī'klōid). [Gr. κυκλοειδής, < κύκλος, circle, + εἶδος, form.] I. a. Resembling a circle; in ichth., more or less circular in form, with concentric striations, as the scales of certain fishes; having such scales, as a fish. II. n. In geom., a curve generated by a point in the circumference or on a radius or prolonged radius of a circle when the circle is rolled along a straight line and kept always in the same plane; in ichth., a cycloid fish. — cy-cloi'dal, a. — cy-cloi'dal-ly, adv.

cy-clom-e-ter (sī-klom'e-tēr), n. [See cyclo- and -meter.] A device for recording the revolutions of a wheel and hence the distance traversed by a wheeled vehicle.

cy-clo-nal (sī'klō-nāl), a. Of, pertaining to, or of the nature of a cyclone; cyclonic.

cy-clone (sī'klōn), n. [Gr. κυκλῶν, ppr. of κυκλοῦν, move in a circle, < κύκλος: see cycle.] Orig., any of certain storms in which the wind was supposed to have a circular motion; now, an extensive horizontal movement of the atmosphere spirally around and toward a gradually progressing central region of low barometric pressure (cf. anti-cyclone), sometimes moderate in character, and sometimes violent, as a hurricane, tropical storm, etc. (distinguished from a tornado, which is less extensive and has its origin in a vertical disturbance of the atmosphere); popularly, a tornado. — cy'clone=cel'lar, n. A cellar or underground room or excavation made for refuge from tornadoes (cyclones). — cy-clon'ic (-klon'ik), a. Of, pertaining to, or resembling a cyclone. Also cy-clon'i-cal. — cy-clon'i-cal-ly, adv. — cy-clo-nol'o-gy (-klō-nol'ō-jī), n. [See -logy.] The science dealing with cyclones. — cy-clo'no-scope (-klō'nō-skōp), n. [See -scope.] A device for determining the center of a cyclone.

cy-clo-pæ'di-a, etc. See cyclopædia, etc.

Cy-clo-pe-an (sī-klō-pē'an), a. Of, pertaining to, or characteristic of the Cyclops; hence [sometimes l. c.], gigantic; vast; in arch., noting, pertaining to, or resembling an early style of masonry employing massive stones more or less irregular in shape.

cy-clo-pe-di-a, cy-clo-pæ-di-a (sī-klō-pē'di-ä), n. [NL., < Gr. κύκλος, circle, + παιδεία, education.] A work comprising articles on subjects from all branches of knowledge; an encyclopedia; sometimes, a work comprising articles on all the principal subjects of a particular branch of knowledge (as, a cyclopædia of botany).

Cy-clops (sī'klops), n.; pl. Cyclops or Cyclopes, L. Cyclopes (sī-klō'pēz). [L., < Gr. Κύκλωψ, lit. 'round-eyed,' < κύκλος, circle, + ὤψ, eye.] In Gr. myth., one of a race of giants with but one eye, which was circular and in the middle of the forehead, fabled to have forged thunderbolts for Zeus and to have built the great prehistoric walls of Greece.

— Cy-clop'ic (-klop'ik), a.

cy-clo-ra-ma (sī-klō-rä'mä), n. [Gr. κύκλος, circle, + δράμα, view.] A pictorial representation, in natural perspective, of a landscape, a battle, etc., on the inner wall of a cylindrical room or hall, the spectators occupying a position in the center. — cy-clo-ram'ic (-ram'ik), a.

cy-clo-stom-a-tous (sī-klō-stom'ä-tus), a. [See cyclostome.] Having a circular mouth; specif., belonging or pertaining to the Cyclostomata (see cyclostome). Also cy-clos'to-mato (-klos'tō-mät).

cy-clo-stome (sī'klō-stōm). [Gr. κύκλος, circle, + στόμα (στοματ-), mouth.] I. a. Having a circular mouth; specif., belonging or pertaining to the Cyclostomata, a group or class of eel-like aquatic vertebrates (the lampreys and hags) characterized by pouch-like gills and a circular suctorial mouth without hinged jaws. II. n. A cyclostome vertebrate; a lamprey or a hag. — cy-clos'to-mous (-klos'tō-mus), a. Cyclostomatous.

cy-clo-style (sī'klō-stil), n. [See cyclo- and style.] A manifold device consisting of a kind of pen with a small toothed wheel at the end which cuts minute holes in a specially prepared paper stretched over a smooth surface, thus forming a stencil from which copies are printed.

cyl-in-der (sil'in-dēr), n. [L. cylindrus, < Gr. κύλινδρος, roller, cylinder, < κυλινδρεν, roll.] A geometrical solid generated by the revolution of a rectangle about one of its sides, constituting a figure inclosed by two parallel circular bases and a curved surface whose elements are perpendicular to the bases ('right circular cylinder'); a similar solid in which the elements of the curved surface are oblique to the circular bases ('oblique circular cylinder'); any solid bounded by two parallel planes and a curved surface generated by a moving straight line which constantly touches a fixed curve and is always parallel to its original position; a curved surface generated in this manner; also, any cylinder-like object or part, whether solid or hollow; the rotating part of a revolver, which contains the chambers for the cartridges; the chamber in an engine in which the working fluid acts upon the piston; in certain printing-presses, a rotating cylinder which produces the impression, under which a flat form to be printed from passes, or either of two cylinders, one carrying a curved form or plate to be printed from, which rotate against each other in opposite directions. — cyl'in-der, v. t. To furnish with a cylinder or cylinders; also, to subject to the action of a cylinder or cylinders. — cy-lin-dric, cy-lin-dri-cal (si-lin'drik, -dri-kāl), a. [Gr. κυλινδρικός.] Of, pertaining to, or of the form of a cylinder. — cy-lin'dri-cal-ly, adv. — cyl'in-droid. [Gr.

Cyclopean Mosaic. — Walls of Assos, in the Troad (in northwestern Asia Minor).

fat, fāte, fār, fāl, āsk, fāre; net, mē, hēr; pin, pine; not, nōte, möve, nōr; up, lūte, pull; oi, oil; ou, out; (lightened) aviāry, ēlect, agōny, intō, ūnite; (obscured) errānt, operā, ardēt, actōr, natūre; ch, chip; g, go; th, thin; th, then; y, you;

κυλινδροειδής: see -oid.] I. a. Resembling a cylinder; pertaining to or of the nature of a cylindroid. II. n. A solid having the form of a cylinder with equal and parallel elliptical bases.

cy-līx (sī'liks or sil'iks), n.; pl. cylices (sil'i-sēz). [Gr. κύλιξ.] In Gr. antiq., a drinking-cup, usually broad and shallow, with or without a stem and foot, and provided with two handles not extending above the rim.

Cylix. — Museum of Fine Arts, Boston.

Cyl-le-ni-an (silē'ni-ān), a. [L. Cyllenius.] Pertaining to Mount Cyllene, in northern Peloponnesus, Greece, or to the god Hermes, reputed to have been born there.

cy-ma (sī'mā), n.; pl. -mæ (-mē). [NL., < Gr. κύμα, something swollen, wave, waved molding, sprout, < κνείν, be pregnant.] In arch., a molding whose profile is an ogee (called a cyma recta when concave at the top, and a cyma reversa when convex at the top); in bot., a cyme.—cy'ma-graph (-mā-gráf), n. [See -graph.] An instrument for tracing the outline or contour of moldings, profiles, etc.

cy-mar (sī-mār'), n. See simar.

cy-ma-ti-um (sī-mā'shi-um or sī-), n.; pl. -tia (-shi-ā). [L., < Gr. κυμάτιον, dim. of κύμα, E. cyma.] In arch., a cyma; esp., the capping or crowning molding of a cornice, placed above the corona, and commonly having the form of a cyma recta.

cym-bal (sim'bal), n. [L. cymbalum, < Gr. κύβαλον, < κύβη, cup, bowl.] One of a pair of concave plates of brass or bronze which are struck together to produce a sharp, ringing sound: as, "I am become as sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal" (1 Cor. xiii. 1).—cym'baled, a. Furnished with cymbals.—cym'bal-ist, n. One who plays the cymbals.

cyme (sīm), n. [L. cyma, sprout, < Gr. κύμα: see cyma.] In bot., an inflorescence in which the primary axis bears a single terminal flower which develops first, the inflorescence being continued by secondary, tertiary, and other axes; esp., a flat or convex inflorescence of this type.

a, Cyme of houseleek; b, Cyme of forget-me-not.

cy-mene (sī'mēn), n. [L. cuminum: see cumin.] In chem., a liquid hydrocarbon with a pleasant smell, occurring in the volatile oil of the common cumin, Cuminum cyminum.

cy-mo-geno (sī'mō-jēn), n. [From cymene + Gr. -γενής, produced.] In chem., a mixture of very volatile inflammable hydrocarbons obtained at the beginning of the distillation of crude petroleum: used for producing low temperatures by evaporation.

cy-mo-graph (sī'mō-gráf), etc. Same as kymograph, etc.
cy-mom-e-ter (sī-mom'e-tēr), n. [Gr. κύμα, wave; see -meter.] In elect., an instrument for measuring Hertzian or electric waves.

cy-mo-phane (sī'mō-fān), n. [Gr. κύμα, wave, + φαίνεσθαι, appear.] Chrysoberyl.

di-et² (dī'et), n. [OF. diète (F. diète), < L. diæta, < Gr. diæta, way of living, diet.] Way of living; esp., manner of living as regards food; also, a particular course of food, as one prescribed to improve the physical condition or cure a disease; also, food, esp. as considered in relation to its quality and effects.—di-et², v.; -eted, -eting. I. tr. To feed, esp. with a particular kind of food; also, to regulate the food of, as to improve the physical condition. II. intr. To eat; feed; also, to adhere to a particular diet.—di-e-ta-ri-an (di-e-tā'ri-an), n. One who adheres to a dietary or diet.—di-e-ta-ry (-tā-ri). I. a. Pertaining to diet. II. n.; pl. -ries (-riz). A system or course of diet: also, a regulated allowance of food, as for inmates of a hospital or prison.—di-et-er, *n.

di-e-tet-ic (di-e-tet'ik), a. [L. diæteticus, < Gr. διαίτητικός, < diæta, E. *diet*².] Pertaining to diet or to regulation of the use of food. Also di-e-tet'i-cal.—di-e-tet'i-cal-ly, adv.—di-e-tet'ics, n. The department of medicine concerned with the regulation of diet.—di-e-tet'ist, n. One versed in dietetics; a physician who gives the first place to dietetics in the treatment of disease.

di-e-ti-cian, di-e-ti-tian (di-e-tish'an), n. [From *diet*².] One versed in the regulation of diet; a dietetist.

di-et-kitch-en (dī'et-kich'en), n. An establishment, usually connected with a dispensary or with the outdoor department of a hospital, for preparing and dispensing suitable diet for invalids, esp. among the poor.

di-et-o-ther-a-py (dī'e-tō-ther'a-pi), n. [See *diet*² and therapy.] The treatment of disease by the regulation of diet.

dif-fer (dī'fēr), v. i. [OF. differer (F. différer), < L. differre, carry apart, put off, delay (see *defer*¹), be different, < dis-, apart, + ferre, bear.] To be unlike, dissimilar, or distinct, as in nature or qualities; also, to be at variance in opinion, belief, etc.; disagree; also, to give expression to disagreement; dispute.—dif'fer, n. Difference: as, "I'll pay you the *diff*er out o' my wages" (Lover's "Handy Andy," ix.). [Sc., Ir., and prov. Eng.]

dif-fer-ence (dī'fē-rēns), n. [OF. différence (F. différence), < L. differentia.] The state or relation of being different; dissimilarity; also, an instance of unlikeness or dissimilarity; a point in which things differ; also, a character which one thing has and another has not; a distinguishing characteristic; specif., an alteration or addition employed to differentiate the coats of arms of two persons, which would otherwise be identical; also, distinction or discrimination, or a distinction or discrimination made (as, "to make a différence between the unclean and the clean": Lev. xi. 47); also, a disagreement in opinion; a dispute or quarrel; also, the degree in which one thing differs from another; the amount by which one quantity is greater or less than another; the remainder in subtraction.—to make a difference, to alter or affect the case; matter: as, the way you say it makes a difference, or a great difference; whether you go or not makes little difference (that is, matters little); what you say makes no difference (that is, does not matter). Also, to make a distinction (see def. with quotation above).—dif'fer-ence, v. t.; -enced, -encing. To cause or constitute a difference in or between; make different; also, to perceive the difference in or between; discriminate.

dif-fer-ent (dī'fē-rēnt), a. [OF. different (F. différent), < L. differens (-ent-), ppr. of differre, E. differ.] Differing in character (when followed by a preposition, usually taking from, in England often to or sometimes than, although the constructions with to and than are by many considered improper); having unlike qualities; dissimilar; altered or changed; also, not the same, or not identical; distinct; various or several.

dif-fer-en-ti-a (dī'fē-ren'shi-ā), n.; pl. -tiæ (-shi-ē). [L., difference.] In logic, the character or attribute by which one species is distinguished from all others of the same genus.

dif-fer-en-ti-a-ble (dī'fē-ren'shi-ā-bl), a. Capable of being differentiated.

dif-fer-en-tial (dī'fē-ren'shāl). [L. differentia, E. difference.] I. a. Of or pertaining to difference or diversity; also, exhibiting or depending upon a difference or distinction (as, a differential duty, an import duty imposed unequally on merchandise according to various circumstances, such as place of production, manner of importation, etc.; a differential rate, a special lower rate, as one charged by one of two or more competing transportation lines, or one to one of two or more places competing for the same traffic); discriminative; also, constituting a difference or differentia; distinguishing; distinctive; also, pertaining to distinguishing characteristics (as, differential diagnosis, the distinguishing between two more or less similar diseases or objects of natural history); in math., pertaining to or involving differentials (as, differential calculus, see calculus; a differential coefficient, the measure of the rate of change of a function relatively to its variable); in physics, mach., etc., pertaining to or involving the difference of two or more motions, forces, etc. (as, a differential windlass, a windlass with a barrel composed of two parts of different diameter, one upon which the rope winds and the other upon which it unwinds, the amount of lift and of power exerted being determined by the difference in the two diameters; a differential gear, an arrangement of gears in the transmission system of an automobile, which allows for the difference in speed of the two driving-wheels, as in going around corners, or any of various analogous arrangements of gears). II. n. A differential duty or rate; the difference involved in a differential rate; also, a differentiating characteristic; in math., an infinitesimal difference between consecutive values of a variable quantity; in elect., a coil of wire in which the polar action produced is opposite to that of another coil; in mach., a differential gear.—dif-fer-en'tial-ly, adv. In a differential manner; with reference to a difference, as between quantities or forces; distinctively, or by way of difference.

dif-fer-en-ti-ate (dī'fē-ren'shi-āt), v.; -ated, -ating. [L. differentia, E. difference.] I. tr. To mark off by differences; distinguish; alter or change; make different by modification, as a biological species; also, to perceive the difference in or between; discriminate; in math., to obtain the differential or the differential coefficient. II. intr. To become unlike or dissimilar; change in character; also, to make a distinction; discriminate.—dif-fer-en-ti-a'tion (-ā'shən), n. The act or process of differentiating, or the resulting state; a making or becoming different; alteration; modification during development; a differentiated or altered form; also, discrimination or distinction; in math., the finding of a differential or a differential coefficient.—dif-fer-en'ti-a-tor, n.

dif-fi-cile (dē-fē-sēl), a. [F., < L. difficilis, < dis- (see dis-) + facilis, easy.] Difficult; hard to deal with, get on with, please, or satisfy.

fat, fāte, fār, fāl, āsk, fāre; net, mē, hēr; pin, pine; not, nōte, mōve, nōr; up, lūte, pūll; oi, oil; ou, out; (lightened) aviāry, ēlect, agōny, intō, ūnite; (obscured) errānt, operā, ardent, actōr, natūre; ch, chip; g, go; th, thin; th, then; y, you;

dif-fi-cult (dif'i-kult), a. [From difficultly.] Hard to do, perform, or accomplish; not easy; requiring effort; arduous; laborious; attended with or occasioning trouble; troublesome; sometimes, hard to understand; perplexing; also, of a person, hard to deal with or get on with (as, "A difficult child was Frederick II for Mother Church": H. G. Wells's "Outline of History," xxxiii. § 12); hard to please or satisfy; hard to induce or persuade.—dif-fi-cult-ly, adv.—dif-fi-cult-ness, n.

dif-fi-cul-ty (dif'i-kul-ti), n.; pl. -ties (-tiz). [OF. difficulté (F. difficulté), < L. difficultas, < difficul, old form of difficilis, difficult: see difficile.] The fact or condition of being difficult; arduousness; troublesomeness; perplexing character; embarrassing situation, as of affairs; a trouble; a financial embarrassment; also, a cause of trouble or embarrassment; also, reluctance or unwillingness; a demur or objection; also, a disagreement or quarrel.

dif-fi-dence (dif'i-dens), n. [L. diffidentia, < diffidens, pp. of diffidere, feel distrust, < dis- (see dis-) + fidere, trust.] Distrust or doubt (now rare); esp., distrust of one's self; want of self-confidence; shyness.—dif-fi-dent, a. [L. diffidens (-ent-), pp.] Distrustful (now rare); esp., distrustful of one's self; lacking self-confidence; shy; timid.—dif-fi-dent-ly, adv.

dif-fu-ent (dif'fö-ent), a. [L. diffuens (-ent-), pp. of diffuere, flow apart or away, < dis-, apart, + fluere, flow.] Tending to flow apart; readily dissolving.—dif-fu-ence, n.

dif-form (di-förm'), a. [ML. difformis, < L. dis-, apart, + forma, E. form, n.] Differing in form; dissimilar; of diverse forms; also, irregular in form; not uniform.—dif-for-mi-ty (-förm'i-ti), n. Difference or diversity in form; lack of uniformity.

dif-fract (di-frakt'), v. t. [L. diffractus, pp. of diffringere, < dis-, apart, + frangere, break.] To break up by diffraction.—dif-frac-tion (-frak'shön), n. A modification that light undergoes when it passes by the edge of an opaque body or through a small aperture, or is reflected from a glass or metal surface ruled with fine parallel lines, resulting in the formation of a series of light and dark bands, prismatic colors, or spectra; also, an analogous modification produced upon sound-waves.—dif-frac-tion-grating. See *grating*¹.

Diffraction Bands.
-dif-frac-tive, a. Causing or pertaining to diffraction.

dif-fran-gi-ble (di-fran'ji-bl), a. [L. dis-, apart, + frangere, break: cf. diffract.] Capable of being diffracted.—dif-fran-gi-bil'i-ty (-bil'i-ti), n.

dif-fuse (di-füz'), v. -fused, -fusing. [L. diffusus, pp. of diffundere, < dis-, apart, + fundere, pour.] I. tr. To pour out and spread, as a fluid; spread or scatter widely; disseminate; in physics, to spread by diffusion. II. intr. To spread; in physics, to intermingle or pass by diffusion.—dif-fuse' (-füs'), a. Widely spread or scattered; dispersed; characterized by scattering; also, characterized by great length or discursiveness in speech or writing; not concise; verbose.—dif-fuse-ed-ly (-füz'ed-li), adv.—dif-fuse-ly (-füs'li), adv.—dif-fuse-ness, n.—dif-fus'er (-füz'ér), n. One who or that which diffuses; a device for diffusing light, air, etc.—dif-fus-i-ble, a. Capable of being diffused.—dif-fus-i-bil'i-ty (-bil'i-ti), n.—dif-fu-sion (-füz'zhön), n. [L. diffusio (-n-).] The act of diffusing, or the state of being diffused; distribution; dissemination; also, diffuseness or prolixity of speech or writing; in physics, the spontaneous intermingling of the particles or molecules of two fluids brought into contact; the permeation of one fluid by another.—dif-fu-sive (-siv), a. Tending to diffuse; characterized by diffusion; also, diffuse or prolix.—dif-fu-sive-ly, adv.—dif-fu-sive-ness, n.

dig (dig), v. i.; dug or digged, digging. [ME. diggen; prob. from OF., and ult. akin to E. dike and ditch.] To break up, turn over, or remove earth, etc., as with a spade; make an excavation; fig., to work hard, as at lessons (colloq., U. S.); also, to make a thrust or stab; also, to make one's way by or as by digging.—to dig in, in soldiers' use, to dig a hole or trench for occupancy in a zone subject to the enemy's fire.—to dig out, to depart suddenly; decamp. [Slang, U. S.].—dig, v. t. To break up and turn over, or penetrate and loosen (the ground), with a spade, etc. (often with up); make (a hole, etc.) by removing material, as with a spade; obtain or remove by or as by excavation (often with out or up); also, to make a thrust or stab into; prod; also, to thrust or plunge (an implement, etc.) into something.—to dig up the hatchet. See under hatchet.—dig, n. The act or an act of digging; a thrust or poke; also, a diligent or plodding student (students' slang, U. S.).

di-gam-ma (di-gam'ä), n. [L., < Gr. διγάμμα, < δι-, two, + γάμμα, gamma; from its likeness to two gammas (Γ), one above the other.] A symbol once forming the sixth letter of the Greek alphabet, but early in disuse, corresponding in form to, and preserved in, the Latin and English F, and itself having the value of the English w.—di-gam-mat-ed (-gam'ä-ted), a. Spelled with or having the digamma.

dig-a-mous (dig'ä-mus), a. [LL. digamus, < Gr. διγάμος, < δι-, two, + γάμος, marriage.] Practising or advocating digamy; pertaining to digamy.—dig'a-my, n. [LL. digamia, < Gr. διγάμια.] Second marriage; the practice of marrying again after the death of the first spouse.

di-gas-tric (di-gas'trik), a. [Gr. δι-, two, + γαστήρ, belly.] In anat., having two fleshy bellies with an intervening tendinous part, as certain muscles.

di-gen-e-sis (di-jen'e-sis), n. [See *di-*¹ and genesis.] In biol., successive generation by two different processes, as sexual and asexual.—di-ge-net'ic (-jē-net'ik), a.

di-gest (di-jest' or di-), v. [L. digestus, pp. of digerere, separate, distribute, arrange, dissolve, digest, < di-, for dis-, apart, + gerere, bear.] I. tr. To divide; distribute; also, to dispose methodically; reduce to a systematic form, usually with condensation; also, to arrange methodically in the mind; think over; also, to prepare (food) in the alimentary canal for assimilation into the system; prepare or convert similarly, as insectivorous plants do their prey; promote the digestion of (food); fig., to bear with patience; endure; also, to assimilate mentally; derive mental nourishment from; also, to bring to a perfected state, as by means of heat; reduce or prepare (substances) by the application of moisture and heat, chemicals, etc. II. intr. To digest food; also, to undergo digestion, as food.—di-gest (di'jest), n. [L. digestum (usually pl., digesta), prop. pp. neut.] A collection or summary, as of literary, historical, legal, or scientific matter, arranged in some convenient order; esp., in law, [cap.] a body of Roman laws compiled by order of the emperor Justinian in the 6th century; the Pandects; [l. c.] a systematic abstract of some body of law.—di-gest'-ant, n. In med., an agent that promotes digestion.—di-gest'er, n. One who or that which digests; an apparatus in which substances are reduced or prepared by moisture and heat, chemical action, etc.—di-gest'i-ble, a. [LL. digestibilis.] Capable of being digested; easily digested.—di-gest-i-bil'i-ty (-bil'i-ti), di-gest'i-ble-ness, n.—di-gest'i-bly, adv.—di-ges-tion (-jes'chön), n. [L. digestio (-n-).] The act of digesting, or the resulting state; the process by which food is digested; the function or power of digesting food.—di-ges-tive. I. a. Serving for or pertaining to digestion; having the function of digesting food; promoting digestion; also, digestible. II. n. A substance or agent which promotes digestion.—di-ges-tive-ly, adv.

dig-ger (dig'ér), n. One who or that which digs; a miner; a soldiers' term for a soldier from Australia or New Zealand (cf. to dig in, under dig, v. i.); [cap.] one of a group of Indians of western North America, who subsist largely on roots dug from the ground; [l. c.] an instrument for digging.—dig-ger-wasp, n. Any of a large group of solitary, fossorial hymenopterous insects (families Scoliidae, Pompilidae, Sphegidae, etc.), most of which build their nests in burrows in the ground and provision them with the bodies of spiders, caterpillars, etc., for their young; also, any wasp that burrows.

Digger-wasp (Bembex fasciata).

dig-ging (dig'ing), n. The act of one who or that which digs; also, that which is dug out; also, a place where digging is carried on; pl., a mining locality; any locality or place (colloq.); quarters or abode (colloq.).

dight (dit), v. t.; dight, dighting. [AS. dihtan, compose, ordain, order, arrange, < L. diclare: see dictate.] To prescribe or ordain; consign or put (to death, etc.)†; also, to frame, construct, or make; also (archaic or prov.), to set in order; arrange; make ready; prepare; repair; clean; equip or furnish; dress or clothe; deck or adorn (as, "Slowly, in all his splendors dight, The great sun rises": Longfellow's "Building of the Ship," 264).

dig-it (dij'it), n. [L. digitus, finger, toe.] A finger or toe; the breadth of a finger used as a linear measure, usually equal to three-fourths of an inch; any of the Arabic figures from 1 to 9, sometimes also including the cipher (0); in astron., the twelfth part of the diameter of the sun or the moon.—dig-i-tal (-i-tal). I. a. Of or pertaining to a digit or digits, esp. the digits or fingers; resembling a digit or finger; having digits or digit-like parts. II. n. A finger or toe (rare); also, a key played with the finger, as in a piano or organ.

dig-i-ta-lin (dij-i-tā'lin or dij'i-tā-), n. [See digitalis.] Any of several extracts obtained from digitalis.

dig-i-ta-lis (dij-i-tā'lis), n. [NL. Digitalis, the genus-name (after the G. name fingerhut, 'thimble'; from the shape of the corolla), < L. digitalis, pertaining to the finger, < digitus, E. digit.] Any plant of the scrophulariaceous genus Digitalis, esp. the common foxglove, D. purpurea; the dried leaves of the common foxglove, used in medicine, esp. as a heart-stimulant.

dig-i-tate (dij'i-tāt), a. [L. digitatus.] In zool., having digits or digit-like processes; in bot., having radiating divisions or leaflets resembling the fingers of a hand. Also dig-i-tat-ed (-tātēd).—dig-i-tate-ly, adv.—dig-i-ta'tion (-tā'shən), n. Digitate formation; a digit-like process or division.

digit-. Form of L. digitus, finger, toe, used in combination.

—dig-i-ti-form (dij'i-ti-fōrm), a. [+ -form.] Finger-like.—dig-i-ti-grade (-grād). [+ -grade.]

I. a. Walking on the toes, as most quadrupeds. II. n. A digitigrade animal.

dig-lad-i-a-tion (dī-glād-i-ā'shən), n. [L. digladiari (pp. digladiatus), contend fiercely, < di-, for dis- (see dis-), + gladius, sword.] Combat with swords; hence, a contest of any kind; a quarrel; a dispute. [Archaic.]

dig-glot (dī'glot). [Gr. δὶγλωττος, < di-, two, + γλῶττα, γλῶσσα, tongue.] I. a. Using or containing two languages; bilingual. II. n. A diglot book or edition.—dig-plot/tic, a.

dig-ni-fied (dig'ni-fid), p. a. Invested with dignity; exalted; also, marked by dignity of aspect or manner; stately; decorously grave.—dig'ni-fied-ly, adv.

dig-ni-fy (dig'ni-fi), v. t.; -fied, -fying. [OF. dignifier, < ML. dignificare, < L. dignus, worthy, + facere, make.] To invest with honor or dignity; honor; ennoble; also, to render stately, as literary style; sometimes, to confer unmerited dignity upon; invest with a pretentious title or name.

dig-ni-ta-ry (dig'ni-tā-ri), n.; pl. -ries (-riz). [L. dignitas: see dignity.] One who holds an exalted office, esp. in the church.—dig-ni-ta-ri-al (-tā'ri-al), a.

dig-ni-ty (dig'ni-ti), n.; pl. -ties (-tiz). [OF. dignité (F. dignité), < L. dignitas, worthiness, dignity, rank, office, < dignus, worthy.] Worthiness or worth; nobleness; also, honorable or elevated position or standing; honor; eminence; hence, relative standing; rank; also, an exalted office or title; the person holding it (as, "These filthy dreamers . . . speak evil of dignities": Jude, 8); persons of high rank or standing collectively; also, nobility of manner or style; stateliness; gravity.

Digitate Leaf.

Digitigrade.—Hind Leg of Lion. a, femur or thigh; b, tibia; c, tarsus and metatarsus, or foot exclusive of toes; d, heel; e, sole of foot; f, digits or toes.

di-graph (dī'gráf), n. [Gr. di-, two, + γραφή, writing.] A group of two letters representing a single speech-sound, as ea in head, or th in path.—di-graph'ic (-gráf'ik), a. Pertaining to or of the nature of a digraph; also, written in two different characters or alphabets.

di-gress (di-gres' or di-), v. i. [L. digressus, pp. of digredi, < di-, for dis-, apart, + gradi, walk, go: see gradient.] To turn aside, as from a direct course; diverge; also, to transgress† (as, "this deadly blot in thy digressing son": Shakspeare's "Richard II.," v. 3. 66); also, to deviate from the main subject, theme, etc., as in a discourse.—di-gress'er, n.

—di-gres'sion (-gres'hən), n. [L. digressio (-n-).] The act of digressing; a portion of a discourse, etc., deviating from the main theme.—di-gres'sion-al, a.—di-gres'sive (-gres'iv), a. [LL. digressivus.] Tending to digress; involving digression.—di-gres'sive-ly, adv.—di-gres'sive-ness, n.

di-he-dral (dī-hē'drāl), a. [Gr. di-, two, + ἔδρα, seat, base.] Having, or formed by, two planes (as, a dihedral angle); pertaining to or having a dihedral angle or angles; specif., of two (right and left) planes or wings on an aeroplane or the like, inclined upward or downward with reference to a horizontal transverse line; pertaining to such planes or wings or their inclination.

Dihedral Angle, included between the planes ABD and ABC.

dike (dik), n. [AS. dic = D. dijk = F. digue: cf. ditch and dig.] A long, narrow excavation, esp. for holding or conducting water; a ditch; also, a ridge or bank of earth as thrown up in excavating; a causeway; a low wall or fence, as of earth or stone, for dividing or inclosing land; an embankment for resisting the encroachments of the waters of the sea or a stream; fig., an obstacle or barrier; in geol., a long, usually narrow mass of igneous or eruptive rock intruded into a fissure in older rock; loosely, a similar mass of rock composed of material, as sandstone, which is not igneous or eruptive.—

dike, v. t.; diked, diking. To furnish with a dike or dikes; protect by a dike or embankment.—dik-er (dī'kēr), n.

di-la-cer-ate (di-las'e-rāt or di-), v. t.; -ated, -ating. [L. dilaceratus, pp. of dilacerare, < di-, for dis-, apart, + lacerare, tear: see lacerate.] To rend asunder; tear in pieces.—di-la-cer-a'tion (-las-e-rā'shən), n.

di-lap-i-date (di-lap'i-dāt), v.; -dated, -dating. [L. dilapidatus, pp. of dilapidare, < di-, for dis-, apart, + lapidare, throw stones, < lapis, stone.] I. tr. To bring (a building, etc.) into a ruinous condition, as by misuse or neglect; cause or allow (anything) to fall into ruin or decay; squander or waste, as an estate. II. intr. To fall into ruin or decay.—di-lap'i-dat-ed (-dā-tēd), p. a. Reduced to or fallen into ruin or decay.—di-lap-i-da'tion (-dā'shən), n. [LL. dilapidatio (-n-).] The act or fact of dilapidating; dilapidated condition.—di-lap'i-da-tor, n.

di-lat-a-ble (di-lā'ta-bl or di-), a. Capable of being dilated.—di-lat-a-bil'i-ty (-bil'i-ti), n.

di-lat-an-cy (di-lā'tan-si or di-), n. The property of dilating; in physics, the property of granular masses of expanding in bulk with change of shape, due to the increase of space between the rigid particles as they change their relative positions.—di-lat'ant. I. a. Dilating or expanding; pertaining to or characterized by dilancy. II. n. An agent or instrument that dilates something; a surgeon's dilator; also, a substance having the property of dilating or expanding; a substance having the property of dilancy.

dil-a-ta-tion (dil-ā-tā'shən or di-lā-), n. [L. dilatatio (-n-).] The act of dilating, or the state of being dilated; also, a dilated formation or part.

dil-a-ta-tor (dil-ā-tā-tōr or di-lā-), n. A dilator.

di-late (di-lāt' or di-), v.; -lated, -lating. [OF. F. dilater, < L. dilatare, spread out, extend, < di-, for dis-, apart, + latus, broad.] I. tr. To make wider or larger; expand; distend; enlarge; also, to spread abroad; also, to set forth at length; or expatiate upon† (as, "A prayer . . .
